My kids are aged 8 and 11.

They would like very much if Radford Park could have an eco-friendly wooden adventure playground (like Alice Holt has out front), there is loads of space for it, and would encourage more people to actually frequent Radford park, which as we all know is stunning and we are lucky to have it.

Not all kids have an interest in the skate park mentality, my two certainly don't. They would much rather there was a BMX / bike track created in one of the local areas that they could use, we had one in our local park in London before we moved here, which was well used and very low maintenance.

Another request was for safer crossing at the triple roundabouts.

I know a load of local mums with younger kids are crying out for an open all day soft play centre (like Playzone). Our local YMCA opened one where we used to live (look up The Pod-Hawker Centre, Kingston), and they ran holiday clubs too, it was hugely popular with a café. There are enough unused industrial units around Liphook that surely could be utilised, should an interested party come forward to open one. It was aimed at the baby to 12 year old market.
